Putnam County

Population of Putnam County

In 1850, the first census for Putnam County listed the population of the new county, which did not include land east of the river and some parts of present-day west Putnam County, at 687 persons. During this decade, settlements included Palatka, the county seat, Welaka which had been the proposed "Hilaka County" seat, Peniel, Etoniah, and settlers were moving into the Banana, Johnson, McMeekin, George's Lake area, Crescent City, Georgetown, Drayton Island, Fort Gates and East End areas. Col. Hubbard Hart and Captain R. J. Adams operated a state line to Ocala and were preparing to open the Hart Line on the Ocklawaha River.

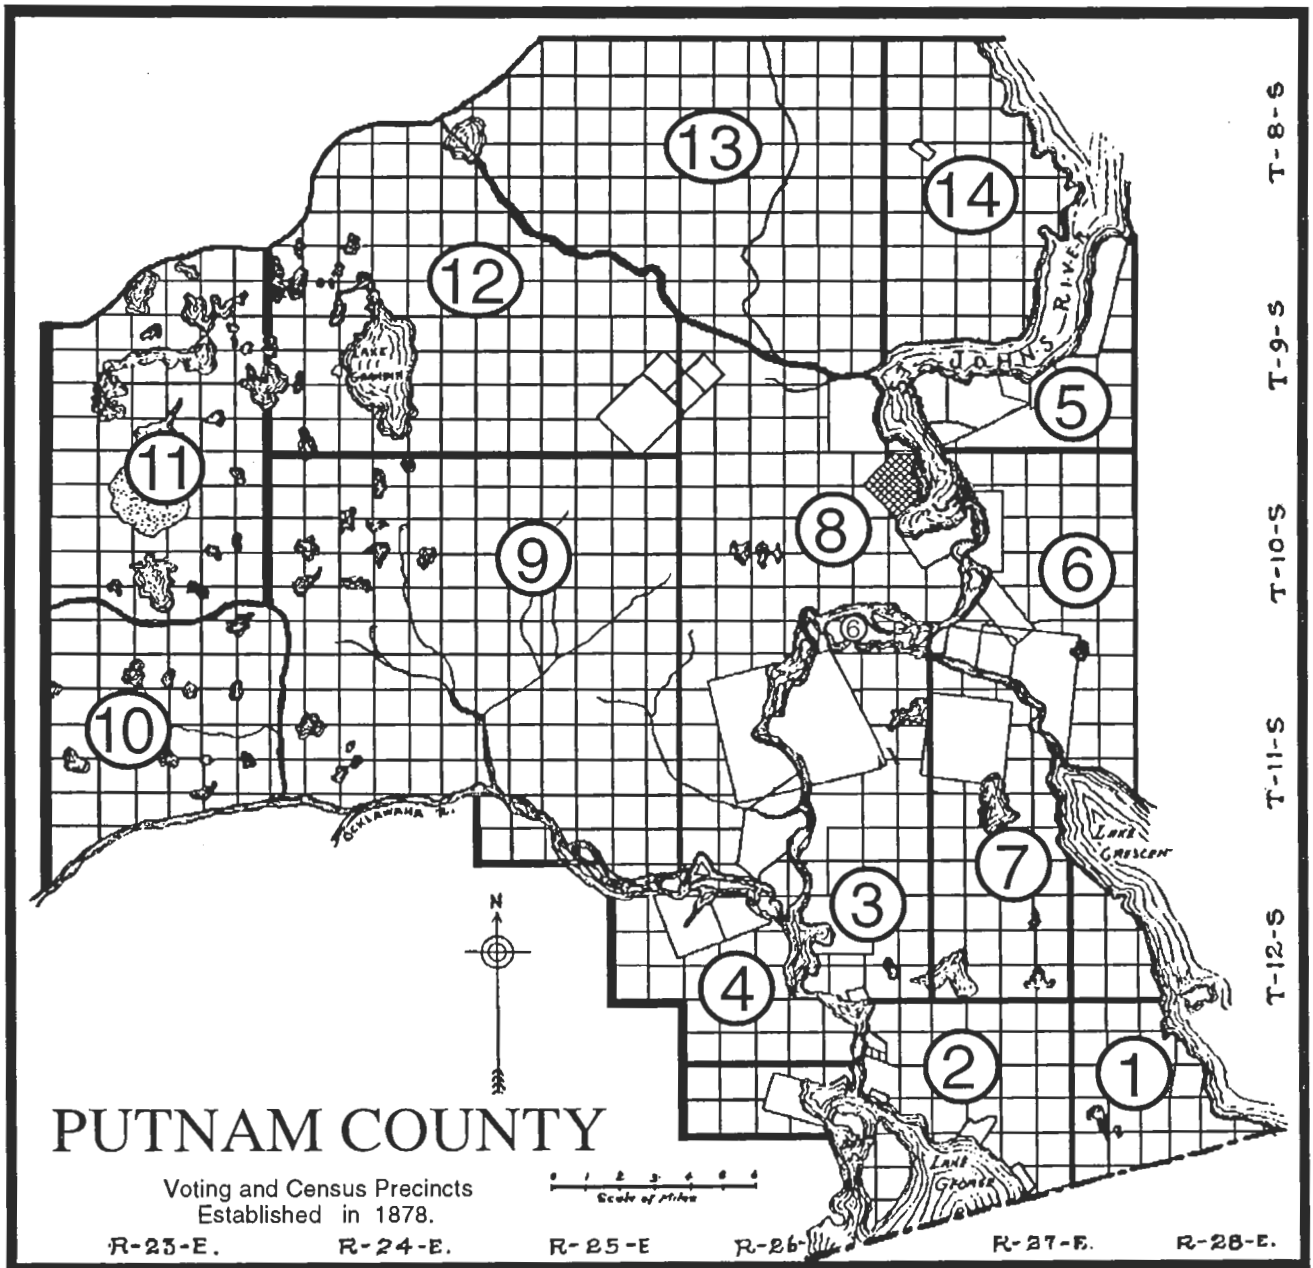

By 1860, the county's population had swelled to 2,712 people. During this decade most of the Yankee patrols in Florida could be found along the St. Johns River and it was here in the county that Florida's Confederate Swamp Fox, J. Dickison, and his men, many of them from Putnam County, gave battle to Federal forces, His hit and run method of battling the enemy was very successful resulting even in the capture and burning of the gunboat Columbine near Horse Landing. During this period many of the people who lived along the river moved to safer areas of Orange Springs, Ocala and Lake City. Places such as Putnam Hall and today's Florahome were relatively safe areas; however, many homes, boats, mills and other businesses were burned. Mrs. Mary Boyd had saved the homes in Palatka by going to the enemy gunboat and talking to a Federal officer who told her "you can look back on this day as the best day's work you have ever done. You have saved lives and property and also saved an old man [Governor William D. Moseley] from being taken prisoner."

In 1868, the county expanded, becoming a county divided by the St. Johns River when the county line became the Range 27 and 28 line running south to Dunn's Lake, now Lake Crescent. The river was considered a highway that would enable people to have better access to the county seat. By 1870, the population was 3,821. The war had ended and many of the people who had homes returned to the county. In some communities, such as Welaka, there were few homes waiting for them, but many of the former residents returned to reestablish their lives. Following the war there was also a great influx of Northerners who would become citizens of the county. Robert E. Lee travelled to Orange Mills to visit his cousin, Robert Cole, who had been a member of his staff during the war. While here, General Lee tasked his first grapefruit which had been grown by Cole. New communities were established at Pomona, Nashua, Norwalk, Syracuse, Saratoga, San Mateo and San Mateo City.

By 1880, Putnam County had 6,281 people within its boundaries. This was the period when steamboat traffic peaked along the St. Johns and trips up the Ocklawaha river. The Jacksonville, Tampa and Key West Railway began its line through the county. Communities were established at Blue Pond (Interlachen), MacWilliams (Hollister), Francis, Keuka and Satsuma.
